1. HENNA PAINTING

Henna has been used for hundreds of years and is a natural plant dye. When applied to the skin, the henna produces a temporary stain - it is similar to a tattoo, but not permanent. Henna is completely natural, perfectly safe and painless.

Henna can be painted almost anywhere on the body and is applied directly onto clean, sanitised skin where the paste hardens as it dries. Once the paste hardens, a mixture of lemon juice and sugar will be applied to the design to help darken the stain and keep the paste on for longer.

Henna is traditionally placed on the hands, feet, ankle, shins, and wrists. You need thick skin in order to get a good dark stain. That is why you see it on hands and feet as this is where your thickest skin is. The farther up your body you go the thinner your skin gets. Less skin, less stain.
